A Big JUICY EARTHWORM

Albatros

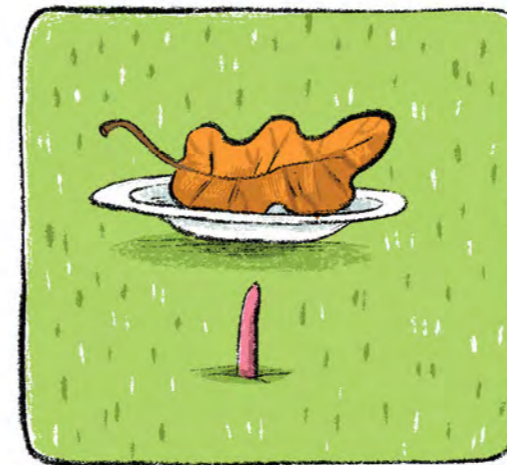

Pipo refused to give up, though.

He tried to lure out the earthworm by offering it a shared lunch . . .

. . . but it didn't move a muscle.

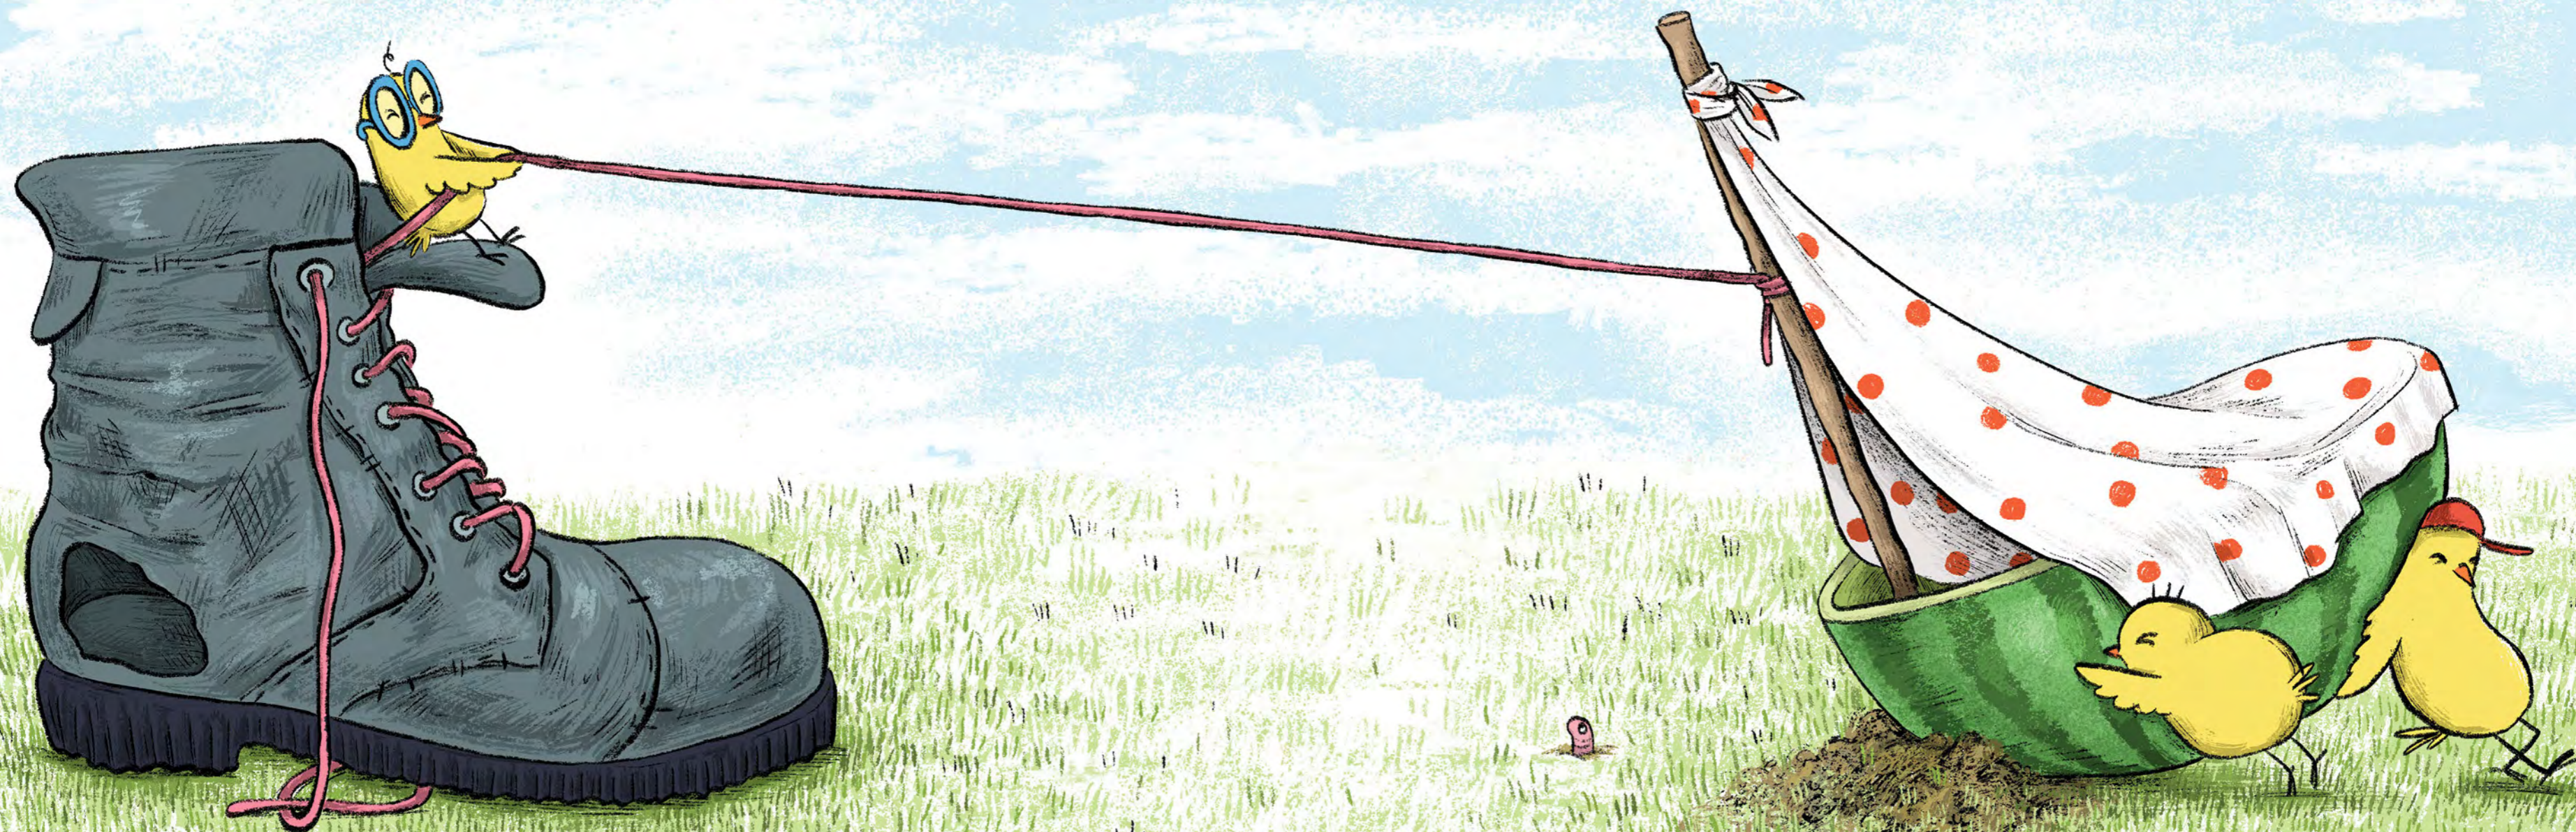

He pulled with all his strength . . .

. . . until finally he yanked out . . .

... AN OLD BOOT!

And so the friends joined forces . . .

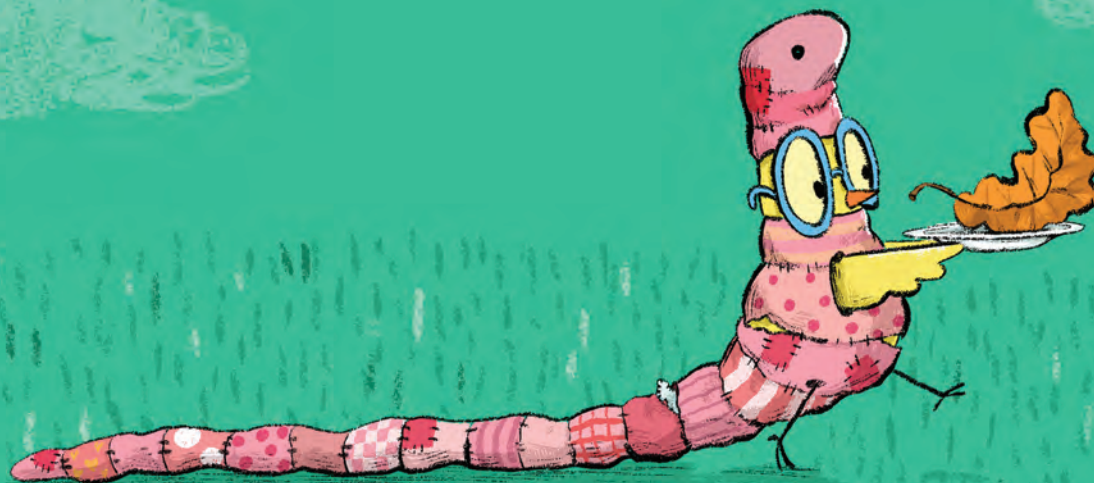

WATERMELON
WORLD

... something the whole
neighborhood could enjoy.

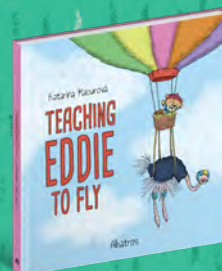

Once there were three friends: Pipo, Bud, and Kenny. They were always thinking up new ways to play, and they were always at their happiest when they were together.

Then one day, Pipo went off on his own and found an unusual earthworm. It wasn't going to leave the earth without a bitter struggle. After battling and defeating his adversary, Pipo discovered something he hadn't expected . . .

This funny springtime story, by a renowned author of popular children's books, is about the importance of perseverance and friendship, the power of the imagination, and how fun it is to do something different.
