Maybe it's because he hates zucchini soup,
just like me.

My grandpa knows a lot of things. He always helps me with my math homework. But when it comes to his cell phone, I'm the one who helps him. He says that when he was little there were no cell phones, just telephones without screens... But how is that even possible?

Some days we take long walks, because Grandpa Rodrigo needs his exercise. On Sundays sometimes we go to the museum and whisper to each other about the things we see in the paintings. One time we went to an amusement park and we both had so much fun. I hope we can go back there soon!

But my favorite part of the week is when we go over to visit my friend Rita and her grandma, whose name is Mercedes and who takes English and computer classes.

Rita's grandpa got his wings and flew away too, just like my grandma. That was a long time ago. I was really little so I didn't get to see it happen.

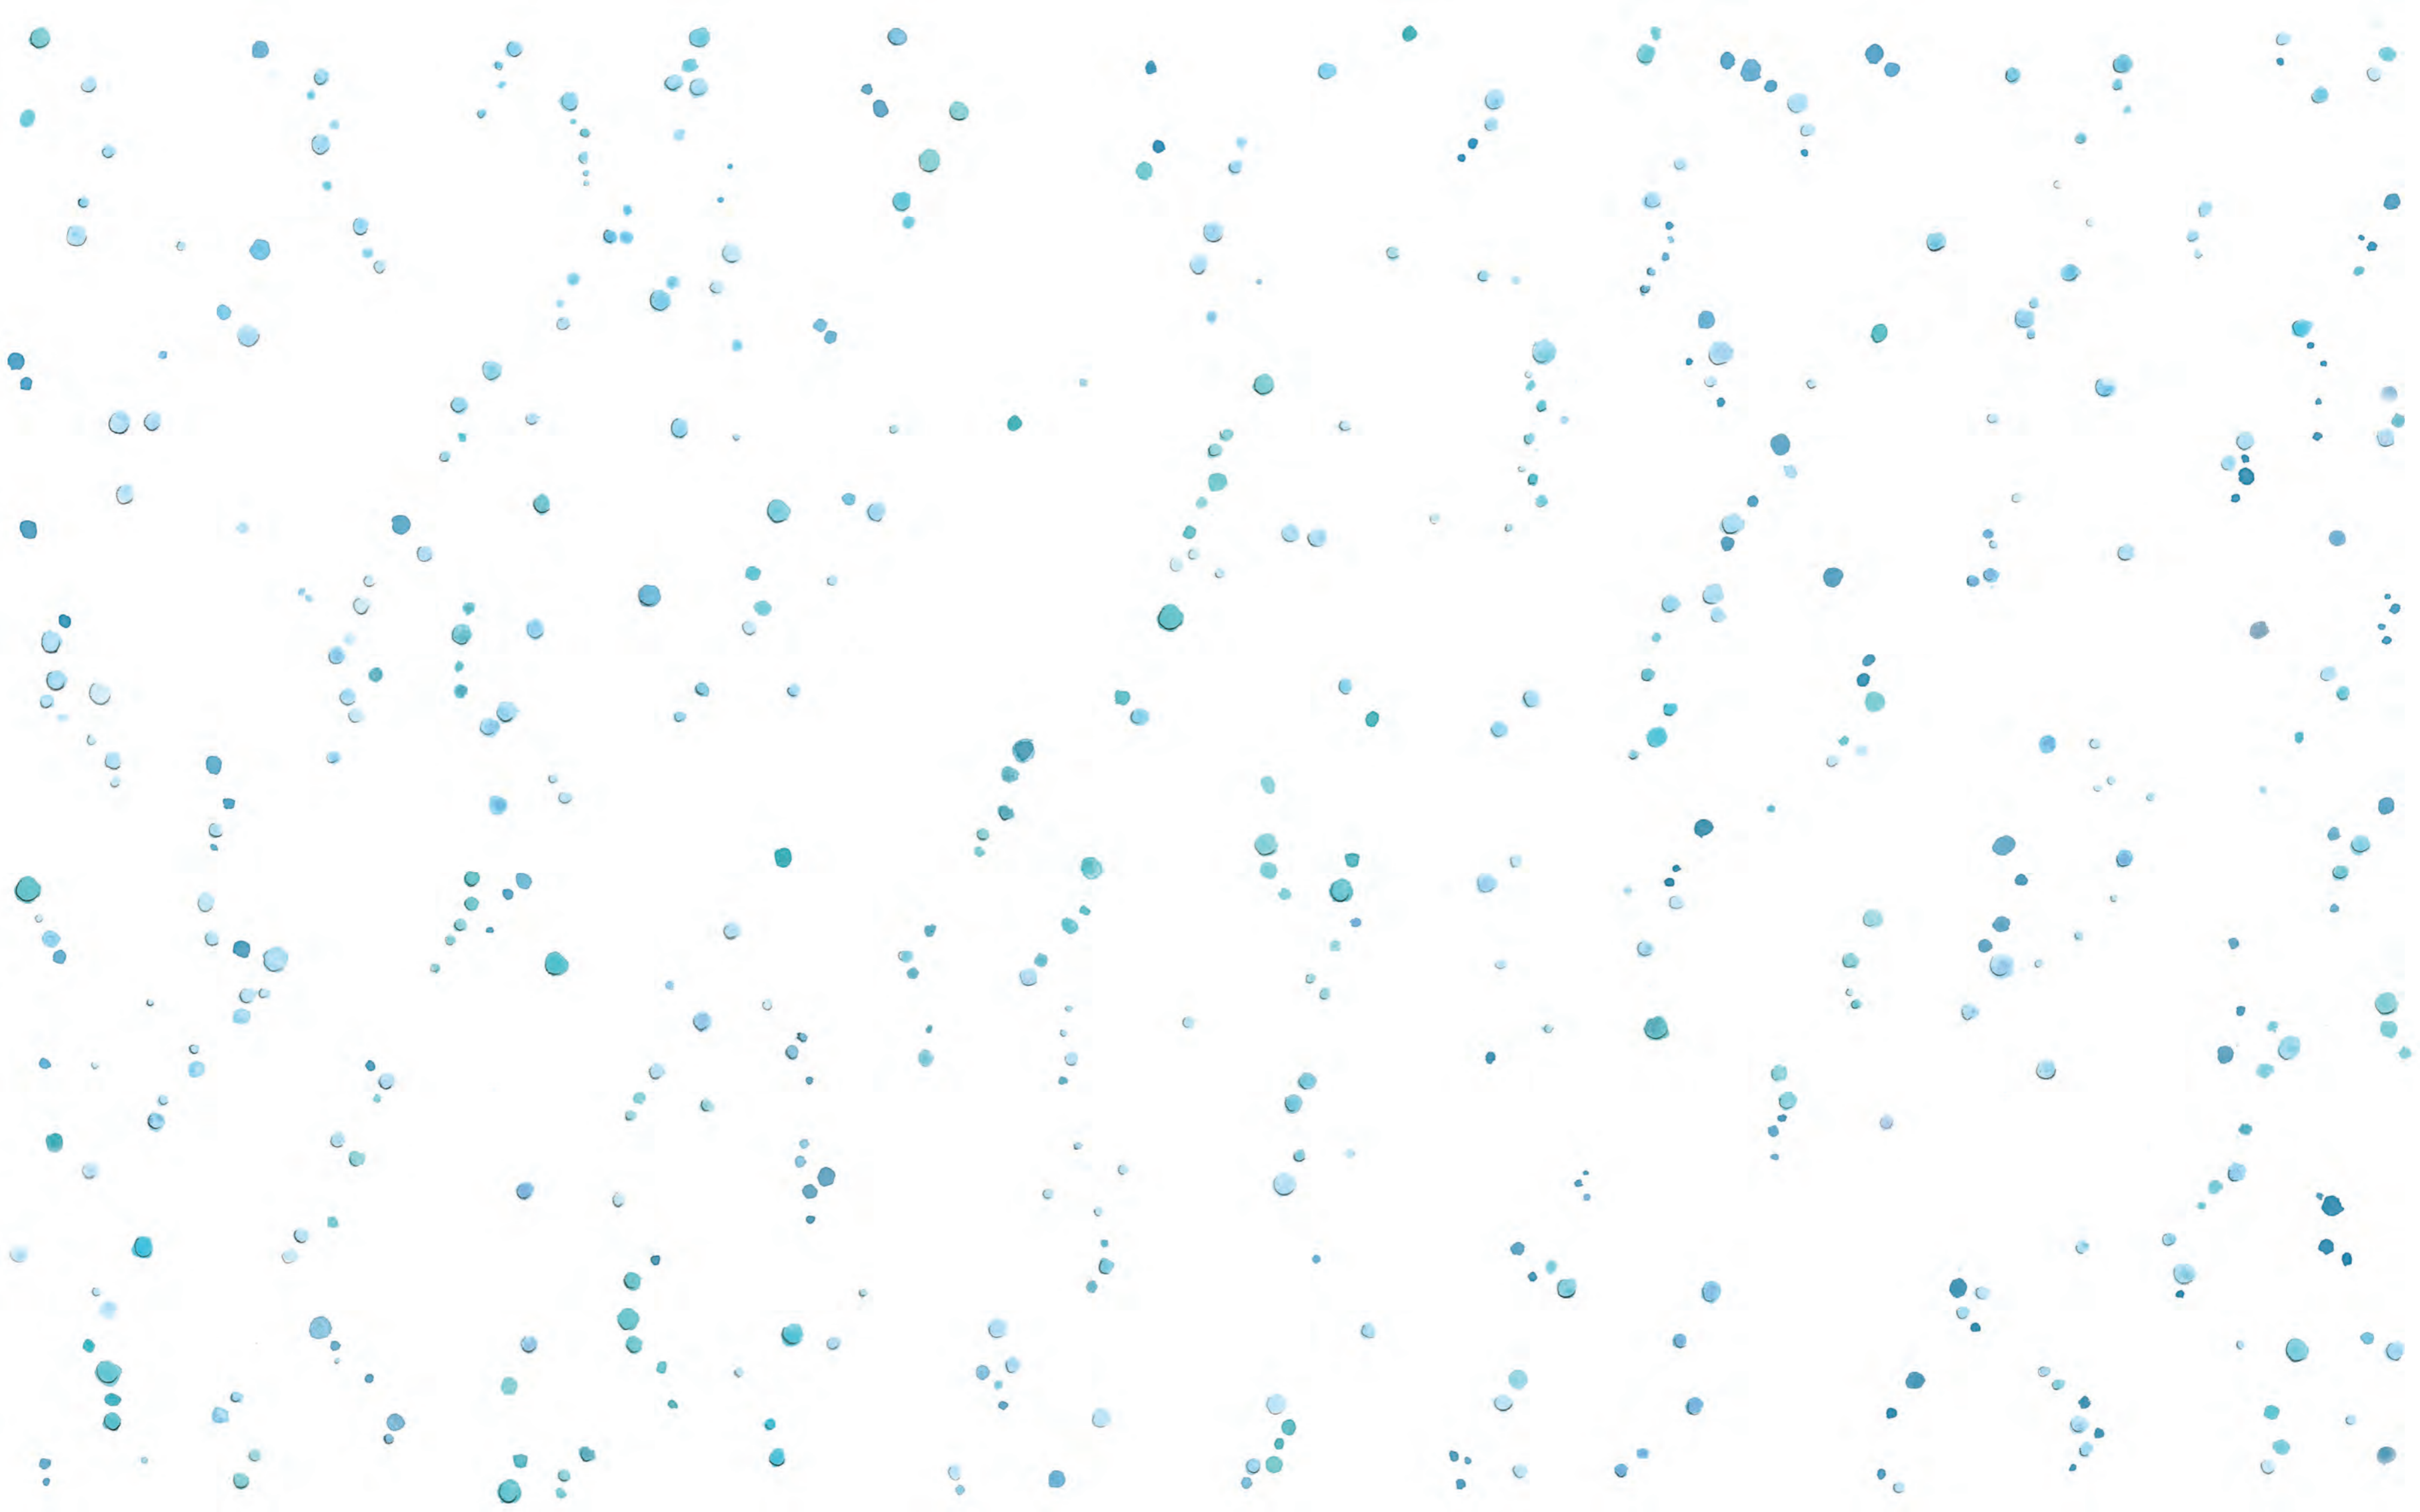

The birdhouses are for Manuel's grandma, whose name is Mila.
She has a ton of birds: Danny, Chicklet, Lily...
I can't remember all their names!
Grandma Mila lets us hold them and give them pieces of bread.
Then she plays the violin for a little while and they fall asleep.

On Friday afternoons we take Martita's grandfather out to buy the newspaper, because sometimes he forgets how to get back home. Once, he even got lost.
Then he gives us lollipops and reads us the news.
All sorts of strange things are always happening around the world!

When Nico and his beloved Grandpa Rodrigo go fishing, they share reading time, talk about art, go bike riding, and do math homework together. And believe it or not, they do all of this . . . when they're not escaping from a thousand piranhas!

With our grandpas and grandmas, we learn, have fun, get excited, and pass down love and bonding from generation to generation. Come experience a heartfelt and humorous look at the relationship between grandparents and grandchildren.
